ETBU student's ministry highlights heroes

By Ken Camp

Texas Baptist Communications

MARSHALL-Every child needs a hero, Michael Barron figured. And given good role models, every child has the potential to become a hero to someone else, he reasoned.

FORT WORTH-About 3,500 college students spent their Labor Day weekend at Focus, a Baptist General Convention of Texas event offering spiritual preparation at the start of the school year.

Gregg Matte, founder of Breakaway Ministries, and Voddie Baucham, a well-known youth speaker, encouraged the students to concentrate on developing themselves spiritually while reaching out to non-believers on their campuses. "Focus" isn't just the name of an event; it's what every Christian needs to do, Matte said.

A focus on faith development, as well as educational development, will lead to greater vision for God's work and more relationships that further the kingdom of God, he explained. Matte urged the students to move beyond a "pep rally for God" and using worship as a drug.

Gibson 'softens' Passion story but Jewish leaders skeptical of movie

By Kevin Eckstrom

Religion News Service

LOS ANGELES (RNS)—Director Mel Gibson, under heavy fire from Jewish groups for his $25 million movie on the death of Jesus, has “softened the story” and made changes to make “The Passion” more palatable to critics, according to a spokesman.

Glowing Hearts in Canada.

Members of Dallas Baptist University's Glowing Heart ministry team perform outside a coffee shop in Canada. The students spent seven days working in Canada in conjunction with the Canadian Southern Baptist Seminary. They led worship and worked with the youth group at Bow Valley Baptist Church in Cochrane. They helped with an outreach effort in Airdrie, Alberta, a town of about 15,000 people outside Calgary. Working with church starter Dwight Huffman, they sought people interested in beginning a Bible study. Teams of five dispersed throughout the town, playing small music venues at coffee shops, talking to people at malls and hosting a free car wash.

Poll: Americans more concerned about Islam today

WASHINGTON (ABP)-A new poll shows Americans are increasingly worried about Islam.

The poll by the Pew Forum on Religion and Public Life and the Pew Research Center shows Americans generally are comfortable with religion playing a role in civic life.

But white evangelical Christians differ sharply from African-Americans on religious views and political commitment, the poll also revealed.

Conference advances Jewish evangelism

HELSINKI, Finland (BP)-Participants in an international conference on Jewish evangelism adopted a statement underscoring Jesus' divinity and, among other items, applauding improved relations between Arab and Jewish believers.

The seventh Lausanne Consultation on Jewish Evangelism international conference, held Aug. 7-12 in Helsinki, Finland, drew a record 200 participants from 18 countries. Participants presented reports and heard updates on Jewish evangelism from around the world.

The Lausanne Consultation on Jewish Evangelism was born in 1980 at a meeting in Thailand sponsored by the Lausanne Committee for World Evangelism. Participants with an interest in Jewish evangelism began meeting every three or four years. The committee also has local chapters, including one in North America.
