Bush-Cheney campaign under fire for effort to identify, target 'friendly' congregations

By Adelle Banks

Religion News Service

WASHINGTON (RNS)-The Bush-Cheney campaign is under fire from church-state separationists for asking supporters to help identify “friendly congregations” in Pennsylvania that might be good locations for distribution of campaign information.

President tells editors he sees his role as a voice for cultural change

WASHINGTON (RNS)-President Bush described himself as a cultural change agent in a group interview with editors and writers of conservative Christian publications.

"The job of a president is to help cultures change," Bush told the nine writers and executives, according to an edited transcript posted on ChristianityToday.com. "Governments cannot change culture alone. I want you to know I understand that. But I can be a voice of cultural change."

In the wide-ranging discussion, Bush addressed domestic and foreign policy, his personal prayer life and his defense of a "culture of life" and traditional marriage.

ANOTHER VIEW: Distorted lenses show false division

By Jimmy Dorrell

All Christians wear glasses of sorts. The lens of one's worldview, often shaped by the culture a person grows up in, impacts how faith and mission are seen. The lens of Western thinking has distorted several biblical, historical, and practical factors and caused an unfortunate myopia about the relationship between evangelism and social ministries.

Biblical lapses.

Disney boycott thrust SBC leaders into national spotlight

By Greg Warner

Associated Baptist Press

ORLANDO (ABP)—Southern Baptists' much-publicized boycott of the Walt Disney Co. had little effect on the media conglomerate, but it established the Southern Baptist Convention as the dominant denominational voice for conservative values, says the author of a forthcoming book.

EDITORIAL: Represent God for $29.95

Here's the latest from the this-would-be-funny-if-it-weren't-so-pathetic department: You can become a "legally ordained minister" within 48 hours.

At least that's what a new e-mail spam offers.

Yes, brothers and sisters, for only $29.95, anyone with a credit card and access to e-mail can get ordained. This is a value "easily worth $100," according to IIS Ministries, the spammer behind this eternity-changing opportunity.

Catholics, Kerry & church discipline

Pity Catholics in this election year. They're divided over whether politicians who support abortion rights and/or gay marriage should receive Communion (what most Baptists call the Lord's Supper). And for Catholics, it's not just a ceremony tacked onto the end of worship service once a quarter. Taking Communion is understood as central to being Catholic-and obtaining salvation.

If a bishop were to deny the "body and blood of Christ" to John Kerry due to his support for abortion rights, the results would reverberate spiritually and politically. Imagine the anguish of rejection by your own church. Imagine the fallout if Catholic voters feared a similar fate for supporting a fallen candidate.

Such censure does not await George Bush. One reason is because he agrees with the Catholic hierarchy on those issues. Another is because he's beyond their reach. Protestants don't believe the Roman Catholic Church can dispense or withhold God's grace. So, while the Catholic bishops' implied support may be politically comforting, the threat of their disapproval (he does counter their teaching on capital punishment) is not spiritually daunting.
