BWA president offers global perspective on the church

Baptist World Alliance President David Coffey recently spoke at several Texas Baptist churches, institutions and events as a part of his visit to the United States. Terri Jo Ryan, religion reporter for the Waco Tribune-Herald, interviewed him.

Q: What are some of the differences you've observed between Texas Baptist life and that in Great Britain?

A: I think the biggest difference is your Sunday school system. You have what is probably a core element of Baptist life in Texas—that is, the commitment to Sunday school. We don't have that. We've tried that, but it hasn't worked. I think there are lots more similarities, such as a commitment to local and global missions and your commitment to the fact that the world doesn't stop at the Texas border, that there is life beyond there.

DOWN HOME: A tornado, rain and a prairie set on fire

The radio announcer mispronounced Darrouzett (dare-uh-ZET), but he got all the others right—Booker, Follett, Lipscomb and Higgins.

And before he finished the list, I knew why he was reciting the names of every village in Lipscomb County: Grassfires.

Sure enough, local officials were thinking about evacuating the entire northeast corner of the Texas Panhandle. An incendiary mix of undiminished drought, unrelenting wind and unending prairie engulfed the county. And the flames threatened everything.

Most of his listeners never knew the announcer botched the pronunciation of Darrouzett. “Lipscomb County, where’s that?” they might have mused. Much closer to Oklahoma, New Mexico, Colorado and Kansas than to Dallas.

DALLAS—Cultural changes require God’s people to be open to fresh expressions of the gospel, Baptist World Alliance President David Coffey told a Texas Baptist conference.

“When there is a change in culture, that constitutes a fresh calling from the missionary God,” Coffey said at Epicenter, an event sponsored by the Baptist General Convention of Texas.

Graham preaches ‘last evangelistic sermon’ in New Orleans

By Bruce Nolan

Religion News Service

NEW ORLEANS (ABP)—Billy Graham seems to have closed out his 60-year career as the country’s most famous evangelist after calling thousands to Christian faith in wounded New Orleans with the acknowledgment, “This is probably the last evangelistic sermon I’ll ever preach.”

Frail and tentative, the 87-year-old Graham shuffled behind a walker toward the pulpit set at one end of the New Orleans Arena as a crowd his organization estimated at 16,300 stood in a sustained roar of applause March 12.

VIDOR—Southeast Texas Baptists have formed a nonprofit ministry to rebuild homes destroyed by Hurricane Rita, but they need skilled volunteers to help them in the months ahead, organizers insist.

Last October, representatives from churches in Golden Triangle Baptist Association and Sabine Neches Baptist Area created a home-repair and reconstruction ministry they call Nehemiah's Vision, drawing inspiration from the Old Testament story about rebuilding the wall around Jerusalem.

Piper gifts fund BUA student village. Baptist University of the Americas received a $1 million gift and $2.5 million interest-free loan from the Christ Is Our Salvation Foundation established by the Paul and Katy Piper family. MARSHALL—When Christian illusionist Drew Worsham makes someone float in the air, performs card tricks or causes objects to disappear, his illusions generate a sense of anticipation. And after capturing the audience’s attention, Worsham shares a powerful message.

“Every performance is an opportunity to use the gifts God has given me, and I am passionate about using these gifts to further his kingdom,” Worsham said. “I am privileged each time I step on a stage—whether that is in a church, on a college campus, a coffee shop or a sidewalk in the middle of a busy downtown.
