Valley probe forthcoming

The Baptist General Convention of Texas Executive Board will hold a special called meeting Oct. 31 to hear the findings of an investigation regarding alleged misappropriation of church-starting funds in the Rio Grande Valley.

Officers of the BGCT and its Executive Board had enlisted Brownsville attorney Diane Dillard to conduct an independent investigation of alleged mishandling of church-starting funds in the Valley.

The board endorsed the probe at its May meeting, approved $50,000 from contingency funds for the investigation and granted the board's chair and the BGCT executive director the ability to authorize another $50,000 if needed. Last month, the board authorized up to an additional $50,000 for the investigation.

The probe centered on suspicions regarding the large number of cell-group missions reported as church starts in the lower Rio Grande Valley from 1996 to 2000. Critics alleged some church starts that received financial help from the BGCT never existed except on paper, and some individuals may have profited by claiming to start multiple, nonexistent "mystery missions."

PLAINVIEW—Normally, a lump of clay has nothing to do with the plight of world hunger. But for a project at Wayland Baptist University, the two are tightly interwoven.

The university's fine arts division is participating in the Empty Bowls project, where people from all walks of life create unique pottery bowls with guidance from an instructor. The bowls are then sold to raise money for local hunger-relief organizations. But there's another purpose for the project, as well.

Stephanie Shaw, assistant coach to the Wayland Flying Queens, works on her bowl alongside Mark Hilliard, assistant professor of art, at a bowl-making session held recently. Shaw and the other Queens players created two bowls each during the evening.

CYBER COLUMN: Hope

By Berry Simpson

I was on a flight from Houston to Washington, D.C., sitting in an aisle seat "C," even though my boarding pass said "A," by the window, which would be my preference.

When I boarded the plane, a young professionally dressed woman was already sitting in my "A" seat. She didn't seem the sort who would intentionally sit in the wrong seat just to get a window view. In fact, most people prefer aisle seats, since they have a bit more leg room and easier access to walk around, so if someone sits in the wrong seat, they are more likely to sit in an aisle seat than a window seat. Not me. I like the window seat so I can watch the passing 3-D map outside my window. But since this window looked out over the wing and my fellow passenger looked like she'd set up camp, I sat in the "C" seat, feeling generous and self-righteous.

RIGHT or WRONG? Christian maturity

In 1 Corinthians 13:11, the Apostle Paul compares and contrasts his behavior as a child and an adult. But is it possible that people mature in some ways and not in others? Would this explain why some demonstrate great strength in their profession, but their sense of ethical judgment remains almost preadolescent?

Brazil mission trip seen as 'anything but average'

LUBBOCK—Troy Burke describes himself as “kind of average.” He’s a large man, but not overly large. He’s a pharmacist—an interesting-enough profession, but by his own admission it’s hardly one that stands out. But recently, he participated in a mission trip that he described as anything but average.

BGCT reorganized but not downsized

By Ken Camp

DALLAS—Two years into a major restructuring of the Baptist Building, a focus on streamlined response to churches has not resulted in the significantly downsized organization some outside observers had anticipated.

Senior administrators point to a Baptist General Convention of Texas Executive Board staff who stay in closer contact with churches, respond more rapidly to congregations' needs, demonstrate greater ethnic diversity—and are slightly larger in number.
