To Own a Dragon: Reflections on Growing Up Without a Father by Donald Miller & John MacMurray (NavPress)

It's always fun to read a Don Miller book, and his latest is no exception. This time, the best-selling Blue Like Jazz author and college speaker teams up with his spiritual mentor, the international nature photographer John MacMurray.

Miller writes in his humorous and transparent style, poetically relating many of the experiences and lessons he missed growing up without an earthly father's presence and training in life skills. While living with MacMurray's family, Miller's friend passed on spiritual insights that shaped his views of God and what it means to be a father.

Having lost my father, Reggie, to cancer earlier this year, my grief is fresh, and I wasn't sure how the book would affect me. However, while reading, I developed an even deeper appreciation for the godly influence of my dad, also being grateful that God is my ever-present, ever-loving and perfect Father.

Benefactors pledge $16 million to seminary. Harold and Dottie Riley of Austin have pledged \$16 million for a campaign to build a 3,500-seat chapel on the Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary campus. Presently, the largest auditorium on campus at the 3,000-student school is the 1,100-seat Truett Auditorium. Since coming to Southwestern as president in 2003, Paige Patterson has made building a new chapel one of his priorities. Two years ago, trustees authorized architects to draw up plans, and a site west of the Smith Center for Leadership Development was selected. Patterson has said no ground will be broken until all funds for the chapel have been committed.

National WMU re-elects Texan as officer. Kathy Hillman of Waco and Kaye Miller of Little Rock, Ark., were elected to serve another year as national officers of Woman's Missionary Union recently at LifeWay Ridgecrest Conference Center in North Carolina. About 750 members were present at WMU's 118th annual meeting to re-elect Miller to a second term as president and Hillman to a third term as recording secretary, both by unanimous vote.

2nd Opinion:

Political party? Irrelevant question

By Taylor Sandlin

It's political season once again—commercials, road signs, stump speeches.

I remember my first interview with a pastor-search committee during my seminary days. A man asked me, "So, are you a Democrat or a Republican?" I looked out over that group of a dozen people whose political identity I had absolutely no idea about and thought to myself, "This is surely a trap." I quickly replied, "If I were to become your pastor, my goal would be for you to never find out." That seemed to satisfy them, although they didn't offer me the job. My answer, though a little evasive, was born not of convenience, but conviction.

Christ's sacrifice is sufficient for all sin

- Hebrews 10:1-18

By Howard Anderson

Diversified Spiritual Associates, San Antonio

The writer of Hebrews concludes his formal argument by reiterating his belief that the single, effective offering of Jesus Christ has ended the vain, repetitious offering of animals and has achieved the goal of the new covenant and the forgiveness of sins. The motive of the Christian faith is to show gratitude for God's mercies in Jesus Christ.

CYBER COLUMN:

The living Christ

By Jeanie Miley

The man started talking rather calmly, telling me how he was involved in his church's effort to convince people that The End is near.

I was listening politely, but very quickly, I began feeling anxious. The longer the man talked, the closer he got to me and the angrier he became. The angrier he got, the more I felt myself trying to back away, and the more I backed away, the louder he got. All I could think about was the lecture I'd heard recently about sick religion and the statistics about what sick religion does to people.

Supreme Court refuses to hear Scout appeal

By Robert Marus

ABP Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON (ABP)—The Supreme Court declined to hear an appeal of a California Supreme Court decision against a Scouting group denied free use of a Berkeley municipal facility because the Boy Scouts ban gays and atheists from their ranks.

EDITORIAL: Oh, that we would debate gross or net

Here's a debate I'd like to hear out of more mouths: Should Christians tithe on the gross or net amount of their salary?

Of course, you might say, "That argument is as stupid and useless as arguing about how many angels can dance on the head of a pin." Somebody else might proclaim: "How legalistic can you get? This is a dumb and pharisaical debate."

Dumb debate? I'll take it. If more Baptists—and other Christians, for that matter—were debating whether they should calculate their tithe on their full salary or on their take-home pay, how much more money would flow into our churches and channel into missions and ministry for the glory of God?

Here's an answer from researchers John and Sylvia Ronsvalle, whose empty tomb research firm studies church giving patterns on a national level: If U.S. Christians would increase their church giving to a tithe, or 10 percent of income (even they didn't specify gross or net), the following would happen:

Bankrupt believers may tithe

By Jason Kane

Religion News Service

WASHINGTON (RNS)—America’s charitable but bankrupt worshippers once again will be able to tithe if Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., and Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, have their way.

“For millions of Americans, charitable giving and tithing is an essential part of their lives,” Obama said. “And in a country where 37 million citizens live in poverty, we should be encouraging charitable giving, not limiting it.”
