SAN ANTONIO—The number of Texas Baptist mission trips to Nuevo Laredo is down significantly this year, due in large part to violence between drug cartels there.

The Baptist General Convention of Texas Border/Mexico Missions office facilitated fewer than 10 mission trips to Nuevo Laredo this year, down from nearly 30 in 2005.

Child learns early lesson about selfless giving

ROUND ROCK—Most adults find it hard to be selfless, no matter how many sermons they hear about it being "more blessed to give than to receive."

But Megan Simmwell, age 7, learned the lesson early—and has become hooked on giving.

Recently, she gave her own brand-new birthday presents to children served by STARRY's emergency shelter program. STARRY is a community-based agency of Children at Heart Ministries that serves children, teenagers and parents in crisis.

ODESSA—As families grow, the need for a larger home often follows. Primera Iglesia Bautista in Odessa has found what seems to be a perfect fit for its growing family of believers.

More than twice as many people have made professions of faith in Jesus Christ in 2006 than in 2005 at Primera, Pastor Mario Martinez said.

Shrink stress and save sanity by getting organized

By Ken Camp

Managing Editor

'Tis the season for anxiety attacks as to-do lists grow longer while days before Christmas grow shorter. But families can reduce holiday stress by following a few simple organizing tips, Christian author Marcia Ramsland said.

"The holidays are as much a matter of organization as they are a matter of the heart," said Ramsland, author of Simplify Your Life: Get Organized and Stay that Way. "If you do anything in life more than once, organize it and simplify it. That's especially true at the holidays."

TOGETHER: Passion grows for being 'on mission'

As 2006 draws to a close, I celebrate the growing passion I see in many churches for being "on mission" with God. This passion is exemplified in many ways.

Our cowboy church leaders are responding to God's blessings in their lives and are starting new churches across Texas. People's lives are being turned around. Folks who have never been to church or had felt they could never again be "at home" in a church are finding God's promise of peace and salvation to be real.

There are new churches in small towns on the edge of urban sprawl where God is using men and women who never before realized they could be leaders in a church to reach scores of people for Christ. Because of the passion for reaching people that bubbles up in the hearts of so many churches, we are starting 180 churches in Texas this year.

A Hispanic church in Texas is so eager for God to work through them that they started a Vacation Bible School in Guanajuato, Mexico, and now a church is there. They connected with the social needs of the people who live in that area, opened a school, now accredited by the Mexican Board of Education, which is teaching labor skills for an impoverished community. One of their families now lives as missionaries in that community, and other families have caught the vision of missions service.

MORE BLESSED TO GIVE: Compassionate conservatives? Research says, 'Yes'

By Frank Brieaddy

Religion News Service

SYRACUSE, N.Y. (RNS)—Syracuse University professor Arthur Brooks may be the newest darling of the religious right in America—and it's making him nervous. The child of academics, raised in a liberal household and educated in the liberal arts, Brooks has written a book that concludes religious conservatives donate far more money than secular liberals to all sorts of charitable activities, irrespective of income.

In the book, Who Really Cares: The Surprising Truth About Compassionate Conservatism, he cites extensive data analysis to demonstrate that values advocated by conservatives—from church attendance and two-parent families to the Protestant work ethic and a distaste for government-funded social services—make conservatives more generous than liberals.

"For too long, liberals have been claiming they are the most virtuous members of American society. Although they usually give less to charity, they have nevertheless lambasted conservatives for their callousness in the face of social injustice."-Arthur Brooks (Photo by www.fotosearch.com)
