DOWN HOME: Pucker up for some really good news

Now, here's some useful news:

Kissing is good for you.

And I'm not making this up.

Heart-Healthy Living magazine puts it out there in black and white in its spring issue. "Couples who kiss often are eight times less likely to feel stressed or depressed." Ta-da!

Worse than crashing a $1.5M Ferrari

Did you hear the one about the actor and the sportscar?

No joke. Comedian Eddie Griffin was practicing for a charity car race to promote his upcoming movie, Redline, when he lost control of a rare Ferrari Enzo and crashed it. (See the wreck on YouTube here.) Griffin totalled the car. It cost $1.5 million.

Wrap your brain around that: A $1.5 million red sportscar, gone in a nanosecond. Can you even comprehend anything on four wheels costing $1.5 million?

The car's owner took the wreck pretty well. Redline producer Daniel Sadek reflected: "I'm glad Eddie came out of the crash OK, but my dream car got destroyed. I went to my trailer for about 15 minutes, and I thought: 'There's people dying every day. A lot of worse things are happening in the world.'"

ETBU nursing students put training into practice in Mexico

MARSHALL—East Texas Baptist University Department of Nursing students took time away from the books and put their training to use, conducting free medical assessment clinics during a weeklong mission trip to Mexico.

The eight nursing students accompanied 28 students involved with the Baptist Student Ministry, traveling to Monterrey, Mexico, during spring break.

Survey says moral values weakened. Three-quarters of Americans believe moral values in America have weakened in the last 20 years, and almost half think they have significantly weakened, according to a survey released by the Media Research Center. The survey found 74 percent of American adults said they believe moral values in the United States are weaker than they were two decades ago, while 48 percent said moral values were “much weaker.” Sixty-eight percent of Americans surveyed said the media—both entertainment and news—have a detrimental effect on moral values. More specifically, 73 percent said entertainment media had a negative influence on moral values, and 54 percent said the news media do. Eighty-seven percent of Americans said they believe in God, while 36 percent agreed that people should always live by God’s principles and teachings. The study was conducted by the polling firm Fabrizio, McLaughlin & Associates and the center’s Culture and Media Institute. The results were based on 1,000 surveys of American adults ages 18 and older by telephone and 1,000 surveys completed online in December. It had an overall margin of error of plus or minus 2.2 percentage points.

Wipe out malaria, first lady urges. Laura Bush congratulated religious and community organizations involved in the fight against malaria and urged others to join in the campaign at a White House conference. She highlighted the President's Malaria Initiative, called PMI, which was launched in 2005 and aims to spend $1.2 billion over five years to address malaria in 15 countries. The first lady cited several groups—from Catholic Relief Services to megachurch pastor Rick Warren's Saddleback Church in California—that are fighting the disease, which kills about 1 million people, many of them children, each year.

HBU students take local & global missions plunge

Two groups of Houston Baptist University students recently stepped out of their comfort zones and into places where they could meet urgent human needs in Christ's name.

One team spent spring break taking an "urban plunge" into Houston's Third Ward—one of the city's most impoverished areas. Another group dug wells, helped offer medical clinics and led Vacation Bible School in Nicaragua.

A village girl in Nicaragua enjoys the pure, clean water a new well provides.

The inner-city missions experience, coordinated with the school's Center for Student Missions, included visiting an adult day-care center, leading a museum field trip for schoolchildren from the Third Ward and helping at the Harbor Light shelter sponsored by the Salvation Army. An inner-city church provided lodging for the students during their three days of service with nonprofit organizations in the area.

"Initially when the students arrive in these impoverished areas, they arrive with the comprehension and interpretation from what they've seen on television—the crimes, the poverty, the struggle. We immediately take them to these neighborhoods they've heard about from the news and show them around. Then, they are connected with people who live in these neighborhoods," said Jason Shaffer, HBU coordinator of spiritual life, community service and missions. "Students' stereotypes and fears fade as they recognize the humanity in those that society casts aside."

Evangelical support for Iraq war apparently wavering

DAMASCUS, Ore. (RNS)—Suzanne Brownlow shivers on an Oregon highway overpass as a cutting wind whips her sign: “Honk to End the War.” Her weekly demonstration is the latest turn in a fractious journey that has taken the evangelical Christian mother from protesting abortion clinics to protesting the war in Iraq.

“I feel like at least we are doing something,” Mrs. Brownlow said, waving to passersby along with her husband, Dave, and two youngest children.

God & Allah

Charles Kimball claimed Islam and Christianity worship the same God: "Allah is simply the Arab name for God" (March 5).

“As I thought of what may await me, I felt a feeling of great trust. No one raised in the kind of church environment I grew up in totally leaves behind the acrid smell of fire and brimstone, but I felt an overwhelming sense of trust in God.”

“There has been a great deal of talk lately about the role of religion in politics. Yet, if the religious voice were truly a factor, then 45 million Americans—and 8 million children—would not be uninsured.”

Marla Feldman

“Saddam Hussein is developing at breakneck speed weapons of mass destruction he plans to use against America and her allies.”

This is a ploy by Muslims to encourage the widespread use of this falsehood by nonbelievers so the non-Islamic world might be tranquilized into thinking Islam is just another harmless religion, one that might some day be persuaded to convert to Christianity, if we don't antagonize them by political incorrectness.

A comparison of the characterizations of Allah in the Qur'an and Jehovah God in the Bible will reveal vastly different beings the most casual eye can easily detect.

Two generations of Wiesers serve as student missionaries

ALVIN—The Wieser family sees student missionary service as more than a family tradition. For two generations, they believe it's been God's instrument for confirming a calling to Christian service.

Ken and Judy Wieser both became involved in missions through what was then called the Baptist Student Union at Stephen F. Austin State University in Nacogdoches. Their three children—Keith, Jana and Kris—not only followed their parents' lead in their college choice, but also each served terms as student missionaries.
