

Abuse survivors struggle with loss of faith, confidence

November 7, 2008

It's been 23 years since Diane Bach left the Tony Alamo Christian Ministries compound in Arkansas, but she still struggles to make decisions for herself.

Father, Son & Who?

November 7, 2008

Baptists profess to believe in the Trinity. But through history, some Baptist branches have leaned toward a form of Unitarianism, sometimes centered on the Creator and often focused on Jesus.

Baptist hymnody largely settles for two out of three in Trinity

November 7, 2008

Hymns sung in most Baptist churches historically have been "More About Jesus" than about either God the Father or the Holy Spirit, several church music experts agree.

Charismatic Southern Baptist churches see themselves as open to spiritual gifts

November 7, 2008

Ron Phillips, pastor of a charismatic Baptist church in Chattanooga, Tenn., thinks many SBC churches are more interested in appearing mainstream and acceptable to the intelligentsia than in being true to Baptists' free-church tradition.

Trinity debate trickles down to gender roles

November 7, 2008

There's a tempest brewing among evangelical theologians about the triune nature of God, with potential to spill beyond academic halls into relationships between males and females in the church and home.

An interfaith church where Christians are not in charge

November 7, 2008

Faith House Manhattan is a church where Christians are not in charge, pastor Samir Selmanovic, a Seventh-day Adventist.

Faith Digest: Literalists less likely to vote for minority

November 7, 2008

Whites who interpret the Bible literally or who worship in an all-white congregation would be less likely to vote for a racial minority candidate for president, according to a recent survey by Baylor University's Institute for Studies of Religion.

Constitution aside, why should churches avoid partisanship?

November 7, 2008

Is church endorsement of political candidates a good idea from either a civic or theological perspective?

Francis Schaeffer's son says his father wouldn't recognize the movement he birthed

November 7, 2008

Francis Schaeffer's Christian moral philosophy has been perverted into a purely political movement that is "essentially the heart and soul of the Republican party," says his son, Frank Schaeffer.

Religious "test" for public office? Yes and no

November 7, 2008

American Christians may pledge loyalty to the U.S. Constitution. But behind the closed curtain of the polling booth, many violate the spirit of the constitutional prohibition on any religious test for public office. And several church-state experts insist that's not altogether bad—up to a point.

Hot-button culture war issues not so hot for young evangelicals, study shows

November 7, 2008

A large study of religious Americans suggests white evangelicals' views on gay rights may be shifting to the left.

Report calls U.S. church giving “lukewarm”

November 7, 2008

The total portion of per capita income given to churches in 2006 was lower than in the worst year of the Great Depression, according to a survey by empty tomb inc.