Hispanic population transforming United States' religious landscape

By Adelle Banks

Religion News Service

ASHINGTON (RNS)—About half the nation's Hispanics—including many who still identify themselves as Roman Catholic—consider themselves charismatics or Pentecostals, creating a confluence of streams in American Christianity, a new study has revealed.

"Simply put, Latinos are transforming the nation's religious landscape," said Roberto Suro, director of the Pew Hispanic Center, one of two organizations that produced the study.

Among Latino Christians:

- 75 percent believe in miracles
- 71 percent say religion is very important
- 70 percent pray every day
- 53 percent believe the Bible is the literal word of God
- 52 percent believe Jesus will return in their lifetime
- 47 percent attend church at least weekly
- 29 percent speak in tongues at least weekly

God, by any other name

The Baptist Standard is no longer taking a stance for Christ and is backing this left-wing anti-Christian terrorist, Charles Kimball (March 5). Why else would they give him and his rhetoric the attention they have? I am the Sunday school director for a Baptist church in Texas, but I will be moving towards independent. I will no longer support the Baptist General Convention of Texas or the Southern Baptist Convention. It is apparent the church is being attacked not only by Muslims and our alleged own government but from within also.

"If Christians could stop arguing about things Jesus didn't mention or value, and if we could turn down our institutional ambitions and pride, we would see that our singular contribution to these difficult times is community.

Not just niceness and smiles, but radically open and transformative community. Jesus said, 'Be one,' not 'be right.' He said, 'Love one another,' not 'judge one another.' Our ... world is desperate for authentic community."

I will do my part to expose your efforts to fuel this intended means for a one-world religion, which is exactly what Kimball's message is. Read your Bible to find that there will be no peace between Muslim and Christian/Jews until the return of Christ. You are either for Christ or against him. Our God is a jealous god who shares his glory with no other. What an example you at the Baptist Standard set. But for me and my house, we will serve the Lord.

Someone needs to see to it that Kimball is deported to the Middle East along with every so-called Baptist that supports his ideology. The Bible tells us people like him are coming. Look up!

What people don't know about religion can hurt them

By Nancy Haught

Religion News Service

BOSTON (RNS)—What Americans don't know about religion is sometimes funny. For instance, when Jay Leno interviewed people on the street recently, someone told him God made Eve out of an apple.

Americans' ignorance also makes for some astonishing statistics. Ten percent believe Joan of Arc was Noah's wife. Seventy-five percent are certain the Bible says, "God helps those who help themselves." Even evangelical Christians have lapses: 20 percent say they believe in reincarnation.

Churches pressure travel industry on sex trafficking

By Melissa Stee

Religion News Service

WASHINGTON (RNS)—Faith groups are using their collective influence and financial wherewithal to press the travel and hospitality industry to take greater steps to protect children from sex trafficking.

Increasing numbers of church groups and other religious bodies say it's not only a moral imperative to guard against sex trafficking, but also makes good business sense for hotels, airlines and cruise companies.

TOGETHER: Missions strategy that will 'get 'er done'

In a world that is increasingly difficult to understand, where terrors and threats fill every newscast, how do we become more effective bearers of good news in our mission endeavors? How do we become friends to the friendless? How do we become powerful and winsome witnesses to the saving grace of Jesus Christ?

These are critical questions facing Texas Baptists, and we are seeking answers.

Executive Director
BGCT Executive
Board

Bill O'Brien, in his important monograph Challenges Confronting Baptist Missions, says the lingering impact of the enlightenment, slavery, colonialism and racism reflected in the attitudes that still shape so much of western Christianity affects negatively our ability to think in new ways about how we are to do missions in this century. The truth continues to be that "the past is not over."

Recognizing what is behind, we move forward with grace and faith, insight and hope. We find ways to offer our enormous spiritual, human and financial resources to God in a humble and generous way. A missions strategy that will impact the future will be:

Competing state conventions challenge associations

By Ken Camp & Robert Dilday

Baptist Standard & Religious Herald

Dual—and sometimes dueling—state conventions often present a challenge for associations of churches.

In keeping with Baptist polity, associations are autonomous, stand-alone organizations, just as Baptist churches and state and national conventions are. But in practice, associations have maintained close ties to state conventions—often sharing funding and even staff positions.

NETWORKS: New label or a new way for churches to relate?

By Ken Camp

Managing Editor

Some associations of churches call themselves “networks” now. And their directors of missions insist it’s more than just a trendy change in terminology.

As missions director for a West Texas area that included both Midland and Odessa Baptist associations, Wayne Keller observed a steady decline in participation in associational life. About two years ago, he decided the associations faced a choice—change or die.

WOVEN TOGETHER: Associations' survival depends on willingness to change

By Robert Dilday

Virginia Religious Herald

The drive to weave ties among local churches is housed deep in the Baptist DNA, some observers of denominational life say. It's an instinct almost as visceral as another, often competing, Baptist characteristic—a fierce independence of thought and practice.

Geography

Baptists....

For many Baptists, the term “cooperation” carries almost as much theological resonance as “believer’s baptism by immersion” and “priesthood of the believer.” And from their earliest years, Baptists in North America have experimented with congregational links, convinced that what their churches couldn’t do on their own, they could do together.
