Brazil mission trip seen as 'anything but average'

LUBBOCK—Troy Burke describes himself as “kind of average.” He’s a large man, but not overly large. He’s a pharmacist—an interesting-enough profession, but by his own admission it’s hardly one that stands out. But recently, he participated in a mission trip that he described as anything but average.

To Own a Dragon: Reflections on Growing Up Without a Father by Donald Miller & John MacMurray (NavPress)

It's always fun to read a Don Miller book, and his latest is no exception. This time, the best-selling Blue Like Jazz author and college speaker teams up with his spiritual mentor, the international nature photographer John MacMurray.

Miller writes in his humorous and transparent style, poetically relating many of the experiences and lessons he missed growing up without an earthly father's presence and training in life skills. While living with MacMurray's family, Miller's friend passed on spiritual insights that shaped his views of God and what it means to be a father.

Having lost my father, Reggie, to cancer earlier this year, my grief is fresh, and I wasn't sure how the book would affect me. However, while reading, I developed an even deeper appreciation for the godly influence of my dad, also being grateful that God is my ever-present, ever-loving and perfect Father.

Benefactors pledge $16 million to seminary. Harold and Dottie Riley of Austin have pledged \$16 million for a campaign to build a 3,500-seat chapel on the Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary campus. Presently, the largest auditorium on campus at the 3,000-student school is the 1,100-seat Truett Auditorium. Since coming to Southwestern as president in 2003, Paige Patterson has made building a new chapel one of his priorities. Two years ago, trustees authorized architects to draw up plans, and a site west of the Smith Center for Leadership Development was selected. Patterson has said no ground will be broken until all funds for the chapel have been committed.

2nd Opinion:

Political party? Irrelevant question

By Taylor Sandlin

It's political season once again—commercials, road signs, stump speeches.

I remember my first interview with a pastor-search committee during my seminary days. A man asked me, "So, are you a Democrat or a Republican?" I looked out over that group of a dozen people whose political identity I had absolutely no idea about and thought to myself, "This is surely a trap." I quickly replied, "If I were to become your pastor, my goal would be for you to never find out." That seemed to satisfy them, although they didn't offer me the job. My answer, though a little evasive, was born not of convenience, but conviction.
