HBU breaks ground for academic center

Houston Baptist University recently broke ground for its university academic center. The center will house the art department, the communications department and the HBU Honors College.

The student newspaper, The Collegian, and the mock trial team will be headquartered in the new facility. Pictured are (left to right) Dan

Providential communication failure led student to DBU and faith in Christ

By George Henson

DALLAS—God must have a sense of humor.

Mamo Ishida believes God used his desire to stay away from a Christian university to bring him to Dallas Baptist University—because he “didn’t know what ‘Baptist’ meant.” More importantly, Ishida found a saving faith in Jesus Christ that he now shares with other students from around the world.

Islam not source of Middle Eastern conflicts, former CIA official insists

By Douglas Todd

Religion News Service

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (RNS)—Angry, violent reformers and terrorists would have arisen out of the Middle East whether Islam had been born or not, a former top CIA official has written.

“A world without Islam would still see most of the enduring bloody rivalries whose wars and tribulations dominate the geopolitical landscape,” Graham Fuller, the CIA’s former head of long-term strategic planning, writes in the cover story of this month’s issue of Foreign Policy magazine.

Youth speaker wants to point

students to real catalyst for change

By Leann Callaway

SAN ANGELO—"Change" may be the buzzword of the moment among presidential candidates, but youth communicator Kevin Kirkland has spent the last five years telling students, "Jesus Christ is the only catalyst that exists for change in a lost world."

Before he established an itinerant ministry in 2003, Kirkland served as a student minister. During that time, he sensed God calling him to develop a ministry that taps into young people's desire to make a difference.

Applause & 'amen'

Applause has become the modern equivalent of "amen" (Jan. 7). Surely any spontaneous show of appreciation in praise of the Lord and/or his handiwork would be a welcome “noise” to God.

Letters are welcomed. Send them to marvknox@baptiststandard.com; 250 words maximum.

"Ultimately, it is Muslims who must excise the scourge of radicalism from Islam. From within. We can help by behaving like the generous, just and benevolent society moderate Muslims once considered us to be."

Oliver "Buzz" Thomas

Minister and lawyer, commenting on hopes for bridging religious divides (USA Today/RNS)

"I'm going to stick to the things that make it critical for me to be president of the United States. I have deep convictions about who goes (to heaven) and who doesn't, but as far as who makes that decision, it isn't me; it's God. I'm going to leave that up to him."

Mike Huckabee

Presidential candidate, deflecting reporters' questions about whether non-Christians can enter heaven (Associated Press/RNS)

"I ask in the name of Jesus Christ that my sins are forgiven, that my family is protected and that I am an instrument of God's will. I'm constantly trying to align myself to what I think he calls on me to do. And sometimes you hear it strongly and sometimes that voice is more muted."

Barack Obama

Responding to a Beliefnet interview question about how he prays (RNS)

"We have been conducting doctrinal frisks and theological GI-tract exams of our candidates, and we have to remember that these candidates are not running for president of the seminary, and they're not running for pastor-in-chief. They're running to be commander in chief at a time of global war on terrorism."

Ralph Reed

GOP strategist and former Christian Coalition leader (RNS)

Whether I choose to utter “amen,” applaud or offer a glowing smile in appreciation of praiseworthy efforts seems to miss the point in the worship experience, as God and worship touch each of us so personally and individually.

Perhaps I’m missing Richard Berry’s point (Jan. 7), but, for one, I’ll continue to worship where I feel my spirit is unfettered by extraneous “rules” or processes.

TOGETHER: Thanks to God; prayer for blessing

As I write this last column, the names and faces of so many of you come to my mind. I cherish the times of worship I have shared in our churches and the strong ministries and testimonies the churches have in our Texas cities and communities.

I want to thank my family—Rosemary, our four children, their four spouses and our 10 grandchildren—for their loving encouragement. Rosemary has loved her opportunities to encourage pastors’ wives across Texas. Her love for them and her ability to help them laugh and rejoice in their calling always amazes me. She is a gracious gift from God to me.

I always will be thankful for the encouragement and wise counsel of my predecessor, William Pinson, as he has responded to my questions and requests. His continued involvement in the work of communicating our Texas Baptist heritage is an important service he continues to give to us.

Three wonderful women served with me as executive administrative assistants; Doris Tinker, Janice Coley and Myla McClinton each served with distinction. Doris continues to work with Dr. Pinson, Janice served faithfully until her health forced her to retire, and Myla, with her smile, loving spirit and tenacious attention to her assignments, has generated great appreciation and respect from all who seek help from my office.

First Baptist Church, Petersburg

In his work titled The Apology, the early church leader Tertullian sought to defend the beliefs and practices of the young church to the rulers of the Roman Empire. According to Tertullian, one of the most often expressed comments about the church by those outside the church was, “Look at how much they love each other.”
