

Joyful funeral, thank God

August 17, 2012

Several hundred people gathered in our church's sanctuary to celebrate the life of a saint who walked among us. There's nothing like a great funeral.

Limitless liberty

August 17, 2012

Baptists and other Christians must not only speak up for religious minorities. We also must declare oppression and persecution are unacceptable.

Healing at home

August 17, 2012

Thank God, my parents are recuperating well from their July 4 car wreck.

Christians & mud

August 17, 2012

When we were little kids, my sister and I got into a huge mud fight. Who knew it would become a metaphor for 21st century American Christianity?

4th to Forget

August 17, 2012

Like most Americans, our family revels in the Fourth of July. This year, not so much.

HBD, America

August 17, 2012

Dear America,

Happy Birthday! It's hard to imagine you're 236 already. My, how you've grown. And changed.

What about mission trips?

August 17, 2012

It's hard to think about summer without thinking about mission trips. Maybe we need to think more thoroughly.

SBC, CBF @ crossroads

August 17, 2012

Two broods of Baptists with roots in the South will reach important crossroads within the next few days.

Humming my temperature

August 17, 2012

Folks closest to me know I'm a hummer. Not the gas-guzzling road hog. The other one. The back-of-the-throat tune heister.

‘A mess like me’

August 17, 2012

Don't lose hope if you think your life—or the life of someone you love—is an irredeemable mess. Jon Lineberger's story proves God is up to the challenge.

‘Sorry’ isn’t enough

August 17, 2012

A new national database provides 2,000-plus reasons for abolishing the death penalty.

Lost in transition

August 17, 2012

A growing number of young Americans are getting lost in the transition between youth and adulthood.
