When a member of Cartwright Baptist Church near Winnsboro gave an offering designated to “benefit and bless the community,” Pastor Cody Mize mobilized members to buy food for shoppers at a local grocery store in nearby Quitman and gasoline for customers at a local service station. Members at the grocery store paid up to $100 per shopper until funds were exhausted. When they called the pastor to let him know, he sent more money with instructions to continue paying for groceries up to $50 per customer. “The gift of groceries and gas through the people of the church and the member who made it possible by their donation is God’s work,” said Debbi Davies of Quitman. “Those who gave and those who received were blessed.”

The Department of Education awarded Hardin-Simmons University a five-year development grant equaling $2.1 million, the first-ever DOE grant HSU has received. The funds are from the competitive Strengthening Institutions Program authorized under Title III and will impact student and post-graduation success directly. “This grant will fund two big initiatives to drive students’ academic success at Hardin-Simmons, allowing our professors to maintain the rigor in their courses and to deliver the excellence in education that is the university's promise," said Mike Monhollon, associate provost and chief data officer at HSU. The grant will support HSU's Strategic Learning Initiative and its Guided Pathways initiative, both part of the university's Forward Together program. Funds from the Strengthening Institutions Program grant will go toward hiring faculty and staff to oversee the Strategic Learning Initiative and Guided Pathways program and construction costs to create designated spaces for meetings.

Poet, author and National Endowment for the Arts fellow Tania Runyan was selected as the speaker for the inaugural forum Lyceum: A Forum for Christian Thinkers, Writers and Scholars at East Texas Baptist University. The new academic forum is designed to provide the ETBU community an opportunity to hear from a prominent Christian scholar whose work is presented and discussed in the context of Christian humanities. Runyan talked about how the evolution of her poetry has positively impacted her walk with Christ and understanding of the Bible. “At some point, I began to change how I approached creativity,” she said. “Instead of writing poetry in order to fall in line or make some sort of evangelical statement, I began to look at it with a sense of honesty and curiosity. I began to write poetry as a way to know God myself, and to work through doubts and questions I had.”
