

Half of evangelicals believe prayer can heal mental illness

September 19, 2013

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—A third of Americans and nearly half of evangelical, fundamentalist or born-again Christians believe prayer and Bible study alone can overcome serious mental illness, according to a recent survey by Nashville-based LifeWay Research.

PEOPLE WHO DISAGREE:

If I had a mental health issue, I believe most churches would welcome me.

The survey also found more than two-thirds of Americans—68 percent—would feel welcome in church if they were mentally ill.

Ed Stetzer, president of LifeWay Research, said Christians care about people affected by mental illness. He's glad churches are seen as a welcome place for those with depression, bipolar disorder or schizophrenia.

But he worries some Christians see mental illness as a character flaw rather than a medical condition. Christians will go to the doctor if they break their leg, he said. But some may try to pray away serious mental illness.

“They forget that the key part of mental illness is the word ‘illness,’” he said. “In a typical evangelical church, half the people believe mental illness can be solved by prayer and Bible study alone.”

Four questions

LifeWay Research asked four questions about mental illness as part of a telephone survey of 1,001 Americans conducted Sept. 6-10.

Thirty-five percent agree with the statement, “With just Bible study and prayer alone, people with serious mental illness like depression, bipolar disorder and schizophrenia could overcome mental illness.”

Responses are split by both faith and age.

Fifty percent of those 18-29 years old said prayer and Bible study could overcome mental illness. That number falls to less than 30 percent for those 55-64.

Half of evangelical, fundamentalist or born-again Christians—48 percent—agree prayer can overcome mental illness. Only 27 percent of other Americans agree.

Among other findings:

- Just over half—51 percent—say someone close to them has experienced mental illness. That number drops to 37 percent for those over 65.
- Fifty-four percent of Americans say churches should do more to prevent suicide. That number jumps to 64 percent among evangelical, fundamentalist or born-again Christians.
- Americans who never attend church services are the least likely to agree churches welcome those with mental illness. Those who attend weekly see churches as welcoming.

Tim Clinton, president of the Forest, Va.-based American Association of Christians Counselors, said spirituality can play a crucial role in treating mental illness. He calls it “soul care.”

Clinton hopes more churches will become open to talking about mental illness. That means taking a holistic approach that deals with spiritual, emotional and physical concerns.

That can involve counseling and medication, as well as prayer and Bible study.

“Churches need to be biblical communities of healing,” he said.
