

Young Calvinists at a crossroads after Keller's death

June 7, 2023

While the Neo-Calvinist movement remains influential, controversies and losses raise questions about its future.

One-fourth of Americans watch worship remotely

June 7, 2023

The Pew Research Center finds a third of Americans regularly attend in-person worship services, while a bit more than a quarter regularly watch religious services on TV or online.

Baylor prof explores 'big issues' through novel's characters

June 7, 2023

Author Greg Garrett explores themes of faith, prejudice, violence, love, forgiveness and healing in his latest novel, "Bastille Day."

How Jemar Tisby became a symbol of ‘wokeness’

June 7, 2023

Over the past decade, Jemar Tisby’s life has largely been shaped by two forces: the Bible, and the deaths of young Black men, often at the hands of law enforcement.

Most churchgoers say they want to serve, but few do it

June 7, 2023

Although most churchgoers say they want to serve in their communities for gospel impact, there is a noticeable gap when it comes to the number who are already volunteering for a charity.

Bestselling author and retired pastor Tim Keller dies at 72

June 7, 2023

Tim Keller, an influential Presbyterian Church in America minister who founded a network of evangelical Christian churches in New York City, died. He was 72.

Looking beyond childhood religion grows stronger faith

June 7, 2023

Christians tend to follow their mother's religion, but those who have changed their religion since childhood are spiritually healthier, the American Bible Society said.

Churchgoers encouraged to adopt or provide foster care

June 7, 2023

More pastors are encouraging members to adopt and provide foster care at a time when adoptions have declined in the United States.

Habitat's 'theology of the hammer' offers hope

June 7, 2023

Habitat for Humanity was built on a pair of simple yet profound ideas. Everyone deserves a decent place to live. Anyone who wants to help make that happen is welcome to pick up a hammer and get to work.

More Americans pray in a car than in a house of worship

June 7, 2023

Despite reports of declining worship attendance and religious affiliation, 6 in 10 Americans say that they pray, a new survey reports.

New books spotlight women's leadership in New Testament

June 7, 2023

Several new books are taking a fresh look at the roles of women in Jesus' ministry and in the early church.

'Letter from Birmingham Jail' still relevant, faith leaders say

June 7, 2023

Sixty years after Martin Luther King Jr. wrote his famous "Letter from Birmingham Jail," faith leaders say his response to white clergy critics endures as a "road map" for those working on justice and equal rights.