

Drawings draw children into Bible stories

April 30, 2010

New BaptistWay Press Vacation Bible School materials are featuring illustrations by Scott Byers, a member of Woodlawn Baptist Church in Austin. He produced the images as a way to use his design abilities to share the gospel.

Baptist scholars view Noah's Ark discovery claims with skepticism

April 30, 2010

As the newest reported discovery of Noah's Ark raised doubts even among fellow Ark-hunters, two Baptist seminary professors said Christians should not rest their faith on whether remains of an ancient vessel are ever found high in the mountains of Turkey.

Independent panel criticizes Obama, Bush, Clinton on religious freedom

April 30, 2010

A bipartisan federal panel charged with monitoring religious-freedom questions worldwide has blasted current and past administrations — Republican and Democratic alike — for under-emphasizing religious liberty in foreign policy.

Church in Alvin restored 18 months after Hurricane Ike

April 30, 2010

After a long and trying renovation, South Park Baptist Church in Alvin has emerged from the destruction caused by Hurricane Ike 18 months later to stand restored. And members testify they are more dedicated than ever before to reaching their community for Christ.

Port Neches drama yields 32 professions of faith in Christ

April 30, 2010

By the time First Baptist Church in Port Neches completed three days of performances of the evangelistic play Last Chance, the church saw 32 people make decisions to follow Christ and 65 renew their commitments to him.

Muslims see double standard in “terrorist” label

April 30, 2010

When 19 Muslim men crashed two planes into the World Trade Center, it was widely labeled “Islamic terrorism.” So, when nine members of a Michigan-based Christian militia laid plans to gun down police officers, is it “Christian terrorism?” Many Muslims, and others, think it should be.

Church-state separationists

relieved, displeased by desert-cross decision

April 30, 2010

A divided Supreme Court rendered a complex decision April 28 on the fate of a lonely cross in the California desert. The decision — the first major church-state case of Chief Justice John Roberts' tenure — upset religious-freedom advocates but heartened religious conservatives.

As controversy lingers, Shroud of Turin still draws a crowd

April 30, 2010

The Shroud of Turin, long venerated as the actual burial cloth of Jesus, is being exhibited in the Duomo Di San Giovanni Battista in Turin, Italy, for six weeks ending May 23.

What if Jesus walked on the waters of Lake Wobegon?

April 30, 2010

For the past two years, Lipscomb religion professor Lee Camp has been hosting Tokens, Nashville's "new, old-time radio show," which offers a mix of theology, A-list local musicians, and a hearty helping of Southern-flavored satire.

Making disciples key to the missions imperative, experts insist

April 30, 2010

A clear sense of mission for the 21st century demands understanding the theology that underlies the missionary imperative, commitment to teaching the next generation and sensitivity to the Holy Spirit's guidance, speakers told participants at a Baylor University symposium.

Contraception, abstinence not contradictory, Baylor researcher says

April 30, 2010

Teaching young people the importance of sexual abstinence outside of marriage and sharing information about contraception need not be seen as contradictory messages, a Baylor University researcher has concluded.

Faith leaders protest Arizona's anti-immigration law

April 30, 2010

Religious events across the country are being planned this weekend to protest Arizona's new law giving police more power to crack down on illegal immigration. Critics said the bill encourages racial profiling and illustrates the need for comprehensive immigration reform at the federal level.