- The Baylor University Graduate School, in cooperation with the Baptist General Convention of Texas, has launched the Texas Baptist Universities (TBU) Scholars program, an initiative designed to recruit top graduate student applicants from Texas Baptist universities for Baylor’s Ph.D. programs. Kim Bodenhamer, Hardin-Simmons University; Jessi Hampton, East Texas Baptist University; and Chelsea Ruiz, University of Mary Hardin-Baylor, are the inaugural participants. The TBU Scholars program was created to increase the number of Baptist-educated doctoral students staying in Texas Baptist universities; connect Texas Baptist universities by partnering in graduate education; retain bright doctoral students in Texas Baptist universities as students and, subsequently, as faculty; increase loyalty and involvement of Ph.D. graduates with the BGCT and Texas Baptist universities; and stem the "dying of the light" by providing a continued education for bright students in a Baptist university committed to its religious identity.

- Hardin-Simmons University will offer two new undergraduate degree programs next fall—public administration and nonprofit management.
