

Greece: Faith to go, faith to come home

January 11, 2019

Student Missions Blog: When most people think of Greece, they think of beautiful hills and mountains, clear water, and amazing food and culture. But when I think of Greece, all I see is the life-changing place of Camp Moria and the people in it.

Jamaica: Where love is genuine

January 11, 2019

Student Missions blog: My Jamaica is the place where my heart broke numerous times but was glued together by Jesus being ever present in the very people and situations that broke it.

Greece: God and refugees

January 11, 2019

Student missions blog: For 11 days during Christmas break, I had the opportunity to travel to Lesbos, Greece, with a team to volunteer at a refugee camp.

Ukraine: More than a new pair of shoes

January 11, 2019

Student missions blog: When I first heard about a mission trip to Ukraine, I immediately felt called to go. I saw no better way to spend my Christmas break than to share Jesus with orphans.

Mission Arlington: Take it to the Lord in prayer

January 11, 2019

Student missions blog: I took the advice of one of my teammates and intentionally put myself in a position where I would be uncomfortable so that God could use me.

South Africa: Joy in saying ‘yes’ to God

January 11, 2019

Student missions blog: This semester, the Lord has taught me how much joy is found when we say “yes”—no matter what, where, or who he is calling us to serve.

South Asia: Who is listening?

January 11, 2019

Student Missions blog: Just two weeks before I came back to the States, I saw God pursue the hearts of three girls after one of them overheard a story I was telling some people nearby. I witnessed the Lord lay out a pathway that led directly to him, only I didn’t know it at the time.

Mexico: Coming home

January 11, 2019

Student missions blog: I’m back in Texas after 50-plus days away. People ask me, “I bet you’re glad to be back, right?” I usually just respond with a nod, because on the inside, I don’t really know my answer.

Tennessee: Where the road to surrender led

January 11, 2019

Student missions blog: God worked in me to always trust his will and to have faith that he works out the details. If I had said no, I would have missed out on meeting and learning from some incredible people.

Middle East: Digging up rocks

January 11, 2019

Student missions blog: The Muslim call to prayer cuts through this city five times a day. I should be used to it by now, but it still catches me off guard every time.

---

Philippines: Overwhelming

experiences

January 11, 2019

Student missions blog: I reluctantly agreed to go with a friend to her church's outreach in a less-fortunate area of the city. I was tired from working the day shift at the clinic, but I decided it would be fun to try something new.

Spain: Show the love of God

January 11, 2019

Student missions blog: God has made me understand that missions is not what we do; it is who we are in Jesus Christ. It is to show the love of God in everything we do—no matter if we feel or think we are not making a big impact around us.
