

Sharing life together in Kenya

October 20, 2009

Recently, I was asked to share something meaningful that I've experienced since I've been in Kenya. Immediately, thousands of thoughts invade my brain, recalling the past three and half months in detail.

Saying 'yes' to God in Kenya

October 20, 2009

I've been serving in Mombasa, Kenya, eight months now, and I decided to follow Christ wholeheartedly about two, maybe three, three months ago. That's when I decided it was "all or nothing" and finally said "yes" to God.

Meaningful ministry over a coffee cup

October 20, 2009

Over pumpkin spice lattes, a young woman asked me about the meaning of baptism. Over green tea, a sorority girl celebrated the reality that in Christ she is made new. Over caramel macchiatos, a new friend described her desire to read the Bible from Genesis to Revelation so she can know how great this God is to whom she prays.

Learning about Daily Bread

October 20, 2009

There is a man on our street who sits on the pavement every day. He's not begging as many people do—just covering himself from the sun, the winds, the outside.

Following a clear calling to Kenya

October 20, 2009

I am more than two months into my journey in Kenya, and it has been an adventure so far—a rollercoaster of twists and turns. I've done evangelism, discipleship, preaching and everything in-between.

International students in Pacific Northwest discover God's love

October 20, 2009

My heart was beating fast as I sat on a couch between two girls who had never opened a Bible before.

In Kenya, change of plans according to God's design

October 20, 2009

I went with Rose, Colby, and Robyn to Mombasa Baptist High School for a sports day with the students. As it turned out, I ended up speaking to the students during chapel.

A vessel shaped by the Master

Potter

October 20, 2009

A girl and two guys came in the coffee shop and sat at the table across from me. After watching them take pictures of each other, I offered to take one of the three of them. They enthusiastically thanked me.

‘Praying’ trees in Tahoe City

October 20, 2009

Tahoe City offers breathtaking beauty that never ends. And I have the pleasure of teaching Bible stories and working daily with beautiful first and second graders here.

Seeing the fruit of labor in Alaska

October 20, 2009

Bible story time came around, and the college students acted out the parable of the Good Samaritan. The kids loved it. One of them, A. J., asked Stuart if there were more stories like that one in the Bible.

God knits hearts together

October 20, 2009

There are four other women and five godly men on the Resonate Church staff, and already deep connections have been made as they have welcomed and served me freely. How can people capture your heart in a matter of days? The love of Christ is a powerful thing.

Learning about loving & living water in Guatemala

October 20, 2009

Christ's commandment in John 13:34-35 to love one another had never been clearer in my life. Being in Guatemala showed me what it meant to love one another.
