

Seeing God's Spirit at work in North Africa

January 4, 2010

The group of Americans there lived in close community—not only among themselves, but also with the nationals whom they served. I had more language and cultural experiences in one week out in the country than I've had living in the city for three months. I could see the Lord working and his Spirit moving among their relationships.

One day, we drove about an hour and a half into the countryside and visited a friend, a lady they call Mama. She was very hospitable and wanted to cook for us even though she had less than I could imagine. Through the influence of my friends, she and some other people from her village had accepted the Lord quite a few months ago. They have been growing in their knowledge of the Lord ever since. My time there was very encouraging and enlightening.

Tiffany, a student missionary from Texas A&M University, is serving in Northern Africa with Go Now Missions. Her last name is withheld for security reasons.